

At its height, the Roman Empire was the greatest the world had ever seen. For us, who inherit its legacy, it means civilization and order. But for those conquered by the peerless legions described by Josephus to fuel the Roman Peace, it held another meaning: oppression and terror. The story of Boudicca / Boadicea / Bonduca (the name comes from the Celtic root-word for "Victory" and thus might be properly, and rather ironically, rendered "Victoria" in English) is simple "she suffered, she fought, she died. From the mists of 60AD very little else has come down to us. What we have now is more legend and myth than history, and that history little better than propaganda, written by the victors. It troubles me that such an arresting figure can be so efficiently tamed by history "tamed by playwrights and professors because the British desired the civilized lineage of Rome. Perhaps men fear the violence of women so much because they know how much they have done to deserve the wrath of a woman's resolve. The Latin rendition of Boudicca's final resolve, as Tacitus has reported it, "œid mulieri destinatum," sounds apocalyptic "and so it should. Hear now the voice of Rory mac Cathal mac Brugha, of the Bear's head clan, chariot-brother to the war-leader of the Iceni nation, who sings the wrath of Queen Boudicca. Heed now as song is sung, battle is begun! Abid Vali -- Author of Scattered Seed a pre-European contact novel of Maori Aotearoa (available on Amazon Kindle)
