

Excerpt from The Ancestry of Katharine Choate Paul, Now Mrs. William J. Young, Jr. From this one would think that he must have been in sympathy with what we now know and term militarism. Such is not the fact. The spark that burns upon the altar of youth and bursts into the flame of war and pomp, burned upon his altar. Witness his becoming a Templar, his membership in the militia of his state. But that is where it ended. It all dimmed with age and maturity; in later life the arbitrament of peaceful counsels never appealed to him in vain. He had no use for war or warlike methods. He often remarked the progress that civilization had made and was making, was the end of it all. Just at this time this may be called a vision, and yet it may be the only way to end it, for, as he said, the horror of it all taught more than the pedant.
